How cats are adorably subverting the system.

As everyone knows, cats are amazing and I really like them. One thing that's pretty cool about them is that they get in the way all the time. They are able to sense when you are trying to concentrate, and get in the way at the precise time that you are trying to think.

Now let's move on to something a bit more serious, being a member of the underground cat E-Zine scene. The underground cat E-Zine scene is a mean figurine, which is why I am proposing that we put together a coalition, an E-Zine scene team.

This is Sea-Tac Airport Facebook Youtube Instagram. She is perched on top of the cat tree and really wants me to get out that cigar thing that is filled with catnip.

Now it's time for the cat sports section. This week SEA-TAC (pictured on the right) chased a spider, and then ran around the house. Then she tried to find the spider again, but I don't think she was able to find it.

Gorbachev Puff-Puff Thunderhose sat on my iPad. I decided to give the iPad to Gorby, but realized that he already owned it. I guess I am just accepting that the iPad belongs to the cat.

Now it's time for the cat business section. This week the cats got all up in my business. At one point both cats were on my lap at the same time and really got up in my business. After that we had a long discussion about whether or not Janet Yellen is going to raise interest rates in October. Gorby seems to think that the economy is improving and that we need to increase the interest rates before there is any deflation. Sea-Tac argued that the GDP isn't quite high enough and that the instability in foreign markets (such as China) means that we should wait until 2016 before increasing rates.

Sea-Tac (lower right) is trying to catch a cat toy (upper left) as a way to demonstrate the proletariat's plight in today's society.

Now it's time for the cat protest section. In this section we talk about how my cats are subverting the system. This week Gorby stuck it to the man by puking on the floor. This sign of defiance was echoed throughout my apartment when I stepped in it, and it was gross so I yelled. Sea-Tac chose to subvert capitalism by sitting in my lap and not getting up which prevented me from going to the bathroom. Eventually she did vacate my lap after someone opened the door of my apartment and it startled her. These protest techniques are not only effective, but effectively adorable.

Now it's time for the ending section. In this weekly daily e-zine we've discussed how cats are pretty cute and like to subvert the system in unexpected ways. Next time we will examine how cats are bringing down the system from the inside. Thank you for reading and have a nice day!
